MEMORANDUM FOR: Chairman of the Security Committee

FROM : Philip K. Eckman
Chairman of Research and Development Subcommittee

SUBJECT : 1983 Annual Report for the Research and Development Subcommittee

25X1

1. The Security Committee is a standing committee for the Director of Central Intelligence pursuant to Section 102 of the National Security Act of 1947, Executive Order 11905 and National Security Council Intelligence Directives. One of the missions of the Security Committee is to establish and direct an aggressive and imaginative program of research and development leading to improved security equipment and techniques. The mission is supported by a permanent subcommittee dedicated to security research and development. The Chairman of the Research and Development (R&D) Subcommittee is Dr. Philip K. Eckman, Director of the Office of Research and Development (ORD) for the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), and is designated by the Committee Chairman with the concurrence of the Director of Central Intelligence (DCI).

2. The Executive Secretary of the R&D Subcommittee is [redacted] and the Secretary is [redacted] both of ORD. The functions of the R&D Subcommittee include: 25X1

a. With respect to general technical surveillance countermeasures research and development:

- o To establish and direct an aggressive and imaginative program of research and development leading to improve technical surveillance countermeasures, equipment and techniques.

- o To coordinate research and development programs in the technical countermeasures field, and to assure an effective exchange of information.

SUBJECT: 1983 Annual Report for the R&D Subcommittee

- To promote joint development and procurement of appropriate specialized items of technical surveillance countermeasures equipment. Cost savings or increased security can often be achieved through inter-agency exchange of prototype equipment for evaluation purposes and through joint procurement activities.

- To establish and coordinate research and development programs in such related areas as physical security devices and computer security systems.

b. With respect to physical security, computer security and other technical aspects of security:

- To initiate and coordinate appropriate research and development programs required to support the other missions of the Security Committee.

c. With respect to foreign technical threats:

- To identify and analyze any new foreign technical threats in the field of security resulting from advances in the United States or foreign technology.

3. The R&D Subcommittee is made up of:

Members	Observers
CIA/ORD - Chairman (D/ORD)	CIA/OTS
Treasury - Secret Service	CIA/OS/TSD
FBI	Marine Corps
Department of Energy	DNA
U.S. Army
U.S. Air Force
